LETTER FROM THE EDITOR

Welcome to the 2026 edition of one of the nation's longest-running annual fantasy football publications—we're now in our fourth decade of generating the product you currently hold in your hands. I've had the good fortune of leading the charge for each of those 30-plus editions, beginning with the inaugural release in 1995 . . . with Dan Marino on the cover.

We never imagined we'd still be at it all these decades later. We also never imagined that several of our fantasy leagues founded last century would also still be going strong. I've long maintained that the key to an enduring fantasy league is the quality and dedication of its commissioner. I now believe that more strongly than ever.

My dad was the commissioner of my first fantasy league, in the mid-1980s. There were five of us in the league: my dad, me and my younger brothers Brian, Gary and Tim. (One team each week would double-up and play two games to compensate for the odd number.) Every Sunday, each of us would pencil in our lineup on a sheet of paper attached to a clipboard prior to kickoff of the early games (no Thursday night games back then). As the day progressed, you would scribble a "6" next to your player if he threw or scored a touchdown—no points were awarded for yardage back then, only for touchdowns, field goals and extra points. It wouldn't be until we could check the box scores in the newspaper the next morning that we knew where our teams stood going into the Monday night game.

Gary long ago assumed the commissioner duties of that league, which now has more than twice the number of owners as it did at its inception—and has evolved to incorporate a scoring system that looks far more similar to formats of modern times. The league took its current name, "The Mondriel Fulcher League of Superstars," more than two decades ago to honor the worst pick in the history of this or any other fantasy league. (I urge you to take a moment to look up the career stats Mondriel Fulcher posted as a Raiders tight end a quarter century ago.)

Brian is the commissioner of a league that was started in the mid-1990s by our buddy Todd. It's a keeper league with 26-player rosters and individual defensive players. A couple of the franchises changed ownership in the first decade of the league's existence (Todd's college friend Geno, who once selected Adam Vinatieri in a draft's fourth round, unfortunately left the league long ago), but it has been the same group of 12 teams for more than 20 years now. The league is called "Brent Far," after our pal Valche's comical mispronunciation of a certain Green Bay quarterback's name prior to that quarterback becoming a household name.

My buddy Mike, my best friend from high school, is the commissioner of the Mert Football League. The best part of that league is the video production that goes into the random selection of the draft order every August. That's the league in which I suffered my all-time worst fantasy beat upon finishing a season in a three-way tie for the final playoff spot. The three of us who were tied all went 1-1 against each other head-to-head, so the tiebreaker went to total points. I had one fewer point for the season than Five-Clam Feldman, only because late in the fourth quarter of the Monday night game, Saquon Barkley fumbled as he fell to the ground—the ball was live because Barkley had stumbled without having been touched. Clammy's Laughman Pullman squad had the Green Bay defense, which received two points for the fumble recovery to give Laughman a 1,807–1,806 edge on total points over my Okoboji Curds team.

Last, but certainly not least, a shout-out to my Lehigh buddy Coop, who is now in his 30th year as commissioner of our NY/BOS fantasy league. Coop enforces the best rule of any fantasy league: Show up live to the draft or you don't have a team for that season. A different destination is chosen each year, with past drafts in Vegas, Nashville and Charleston (SC) ranking among the most memorable. This year's draft will be taking place in Austin, Texas.

So to dad, Gary, Todd, Brian, Mike and Coop: Thank you for all of your efforts to get these leagues off the ground and keep them going strong for these past many years. As much as nobody likes it when the days start getting shorter as the end of summer draws near, some of us are fortunate enough to be part of fantasy leagues that have withstood the pressures of time—and because of that, we always have something to look forward to.

Regardless of whether you're a fantasy football veteran or relatively new to our nation's true pastime, the content in this publication has been created to help you draft a winning team. While we can't guarantee that it will land the next Brent Far, we're fully confident that we'll help you avoid drafting the next Mondriel Fulcher.

AUCTION STRATEGY

Fantasy football fans are increasingly turning to auctions as a way to spice up—and significantly lengthen the duration of—draft nights. Here's how to approach a fantasy auction, along with some insight into how our auction dollar values are generated.

While a large percentage of fantasy baseball leagues utilize an auction system, the style of play is still relatively new to most fantasy football enthusiasts. If you're joining an auction league for the first time this year and have experience in a baseball auction league, we can't stress this enough: Do not draw any parallels in terms of strategy between the two. If you do, you're going to have more difficulty winning a title than Robert Saleh will this season.

The auction values you see to the left are based on a $200 salary cap in a 12-team league with 14-player rosters. The biggest adjustment you'll have to make is for your league's cap value (i.e. if your cap is $100, slice all values in half). If your league's player pool is significantly smaller, whether it's fewer teams or fewer players per roster, you'll want to assign higher values to top players and lower values to mediocre performers. An easy way to gauge this is to build up from $1 with the lowest-ranked player at each position. So, for example, if you're in a 10-team league in which each team drafts four (and only four) running backs, players like Tyrone Tracy and Chris Rodriguez will be worth $1.

The way values were generated is quite simple: We took the 2026 projections you'll find in our player profiles section to come up with projected point values (based on the scoring rules at the bottom of the page to the left) and assigned relative dollar values based on production. Novice auction leaguers might be alarmed to see such a large percentage of the highest values being assigned to running backs, but the reasoning is simple: Top running backs produce the most fantasy football points relative to the average player at the running back position. Consider that each fantasy team needs to start two rushers, and the high price becomes a result of low supply yet high demand.

Resist the urge to shell out big fantasy auction bucks on an elite quarterback, and you'll have the budget to land a star running back like Miami's De'Von Achane.

On the flip side, quarterback values may seem staggeringly low. That's because each fantasy team starts just one QB, meaning that in a 12-team league the least productive active signal-caller should be someone along the lines of Matthew Stafford, Patrick Mahomes or Dak Prescott. Being that those guys aren't too shabby, a wise strategy is to refrain from shelling out large bucks on Lamer Jackson, Josh Allen or Drake Maye, and instead apply the majority of your budget to the running back position. That way you have a chance at landing a starting backfield of James Cook and Ashton Jeanty rather than ending up with a far less compelling combination along the lines of Breece Hall and Bucky Irving.

Position scarcity is the main factor driving the values in the remainder of the positions as well. Tight ends are a dime a dozen beyond the top few, and production varies little among kickers. Same thing goes for team defenses. Once you've considered all of these factors, formulate a strategy and stick to it. It's the most disciplined auction league owners who end up being the most satisfied with their Week 1 rosters.

QUARTERBACKS

This chart is designed to help you A) gauge the overall strength of the quarterback position (QBs are highlighted in green), B) get an idea of how early or late in the draft you should be looking to pick quarterbacks, and C) determine where the so-called "tiers" of quarterbacks are located. JOSH ALLEN
Allen has rushed for more touchdowns than any quarterback in NFL history. More than half of his 79 career touchdown runs have come in the past three seasons.

SLEEPERS

MALIK WILLIS, DOLPHINS

Willis offers fantasy upside due to his running ability. Although Miami's receiving corps is riddled with question marks entering the 2026 regular season, Willis will benefit from running back De'Von Achane's ability to play a significant role in the team's passing game.

TYLER SHOUGH, SAINTS

A shoulder injury to quarterback Derek Carr was the motivation for the Saints selecting Shough with the 2025 NFL Draft's 40th overall pick. After beginning his rookie season as team's backup, Shough led New Orleans to a 4-0 record last December.

JACOBY BRISSETT, CARDINALS

Brissett began the 2025 regular season as Arizona's No. 2 quarterback behind Kyler Murray, but he ended it as the team's starter. Expect him to once again deliver a handful of quality performances with intriguing talent among his supporting cast.

(1) Allen, Josh BILLS

The Bills have spent most of the past six seasons playing three receivers almost exclusively, putting Allen in pistol while mixing in RPOs and read-option looks. That's not likely to change with offensive coordinator Joe Brady taking over as head coach.

(2) Maye, Drake PATRIOTS

With the Patriots upgrading both their coaching staff and offensive personnel prior to last season, Maye turned in a performance that nearly earned him an MVP award. His running ability will continue to give him a significant amount of fantasy upside.

Despite the overhaul of Baltimore's coaching staff, expect the Ravens' passing game to continue to be concentrated in the middle of the field, which is where Jackson is most comfortable. His rushing prowess will continue to bolster his fantasy value.

(4) Hurts, Jalen EAGLES

Continuity on the offensive line has played a big role in Philadelphia developing the NFL's most expansive and diverse rushing attack. Hurts has received a lot of carries near the goal line even since Saquon Barkley's arrival in 2024.

(5) Daniels, Jayden COMMANDERS

Daniels proved to be further along as a passer than many expected during an impressive rookie year in 2024. He is expected to be fully healthy for the start of the 2026 regular season after injuries sidelined him for the majority of 2025.

(6) Burrow, Joe BENGALS

The Bengals employ a West Coast passing game that relies heavily on rhythm and timing to create catch-and-run opportunities underneath, which is an approach that suits Burrow. He enters the 2026 regular season with significant fantasy upside.

(19) Murray, Kyler VIKINGS

J.J. McCarthy's abysmal play as Minnesota's quarterback in 2025 convinced the Vikings to sign Murray to a one-year contract in March after he was released by the Cardinals. It's as good a place as any for Murray to resurrect his NFL career.

(20) Willis, Malik DOLPHINS

Although Willis offers fantasy upside due to his running ability, Miami's receiving corps is riddled with question marks entering the 2026 regular season. A case could be made that the Dolphins' best receiver is running back De'Von Achane.

(21) Stroud, C.J. TEXANS

Although the second pick of the 2023 draft came with the same concerns as prior Ohio State QBs, Stroud put any doubts to rest with an outstanding rookie season. His numbers have declined since then, however, making him a risky fantasy option.

Darnold emerged as a solid fantasy option in the Vikings' pass-heavy offense in 2024. He joined a more run-oriented scheme in his first season in Seattle in 2025, and the result was a drop in his fantasy production.

Smith's ability to extend plays when appropriate helped him finish fourth among NFL quarterbacks in passing yards in 2024. His 2025 was abysmal, but Smith at least has a chance for a bounceback season if the Jets' young receivers develop quickly.

(33) Watson, Deshaun BROWNS

Coming off two torn Achilles tendons, Watson will battle for playing time with second-year quarterbacks Shedeur Sanders and Dillon Gabriel. "Deshaun looks great," Browns executive vice president JW Johnson said in a late-April radio interview. "He looks healthy, he's in a great head space."

(34) Tagovailoa, Tua FALCONS

Miami head coach Mike McDaniel's highly schemed system gave Tagovailoa immediate answers when he dropped back, and it was powered for years by a pair of catch-and-run stars in speedsters Tyreek Hill and Jaylen Waddle. If Tagovailoa couldn't thrive in that scenario, it's hard to see him thriving anywhere.

(35) Cousins, Kirk RAIDERS

Cousins joined a Falcons team in 2024 that had selected a skill-position player with a top-8 pick in three straight drafts: TE Kyle Pitts, WR Drake London and RB Bijan Robinson. Even if he does end up starting over rookie Fernando Mendoza, Cousins will be surrounded by far less talent in Vegas.

(36) McCarthy, J.J. VIKINGS

Entering last season, McCarthy seemed to offer intriguing fantasy upside in a pass-first offense with a supporting cast that included tight end T.J. Hockenson along with wideouts Justin Jefferson and Jordan Addison. He enters the 2026 season behind Kyler Murray on Minnesota's depth chart.

(37) Fields, Justin CHIEFS

Acquired by the Chiefs in mid-March from the Jets in exchange for a 2027 sixth-round draft pick, Fields will begin the 2026 season behind Patrick Mahomes on Kansas City's depth chart. It would take a Mahomes injury for Fields to have any fantasy value.

(38) Flacco, Joe BENGALS

The Bengals re-signed Flacco in March to a one-year, $6 million contract to return as Joe Burrow's backup. Flacco, who was effective in place of an injured Burrow last season, said he thinks the reason he wasn't able to land a starting job for 2026 is because "teams are dumb."

JAHMYR GIBBS
With running back David Montgomery having been traded by the Lions to the Texans this past March, Gibbs is likely to see the biggest workload of his career in 2026.

SLEEPERS

BHAYSHUL TUTEN, JAGUARS

Travis Etienne's departure for New Orleans leaves Tuten to begin the 2026 season as Jacksonville's lead running back. He offers intriguing fantasy upside in an offense that made impressive strides in Liam Coen's first season as head coach in 2025.

BLAKE CORUM, RAMS

Because he can play on all three downs, Corum would become an every-week fantasy starter should Kyren Williams suffer an injury in 2026. Even if Williams remains healthy, Corum is expected to take on a bigger workload for the Rams.

NICHOLAS SINGLETON, TITANS

A foot injury Singleton suffered at the Senior Bowl in late January required surgery, prevented him from participating in pre-draft workouts and likely played a role in him falling to the fifth round of this past April's draft. He's expected to be fully recovered prior to Week 1.

(1) Gibbs, Jahmyr LIONS

The 12th overall pick of the 2023 NFL Draft, Gibbs continued to improve over his first three pro seasons. He won't be a 300-carry back, even with David Montgomery having departed for Houston, but Gibbs is likely to see a bigger workload in 2026.

(2) Robinson, Bijan FALCONS

Robinson's receiving production has benefited from the Falcons getting better quarterback play the past two seasons than when he was a rookie in 2023. Although Tyler Allgeier has departed for Arizona, Brian Robinson arrives to share backfield work.

Coming off an injury-marred 2024 season in which he was limited to four games, McCaffrey resumed his role as the focal point of the 49ers' offense in 2025. He's unlikely, however, to surpass 400 touches like he did last season.

(4) Achane, De'Von DOLPHINS

A third-round pick in the 2023 NFL Draft, Achane is arguably the fastest back in football. There's no chance that he'll average 7.8 yards per carry like he did as a rookie, but he should end up with a double-digit touchdown total for a fourth straight season.

(5) Taylor, Jonathan COLTS

Taylor's '22 and '23 seasons were disappointments after he had won the 2021 NFL rushing title by a 552-yard margin. He delivered a bounceback season in 2024 and was even better while leading the league in touchdowns last season.

The sixth overall pick in the 2025 NFL Draft, Jeanty immediately became the focal point of the Las Vegas offense. He's an ideal fit for the outside-zone run scheme expected to be implemented by new Raiders head coach Klint Kubiak.

(60) Vidal, Kimani CHARGERS

A sixth-round pick in the 2024 NFL Draft, Vidal made a big leap in competition level from Troy. Although he entered the league with a three-down skill set, he appears to be overmatched in the pros and has yet to carve out much of a role in the passing game.

(61) Davis, Ray BILLS

While there has been talk prior to each of the past couple of seasons that the Bills planned to lighten James Cook's workload, Cook topped 300 carries for the first time in 2025. Until there's reason to believe otherwise, Davis will continue to have a small role.

"We really like his run style, his ability between the tackles as a finisher," Broncos assistant general manager Reed Burckhardt said after Denver selected Coleman with a fourth-round pick in April's draft. He'll be part of a crowded backfield as a rookie.

Over his first four seasons with the Cardinals, Conner proved to be the physical runner Arizona needed to complement its passing attack. His fifth season ended in Week 3 when he suffered a foot injury. Arizona's backfield has since become very crowded.

Ja'MARR CHASE
Chase in 2024 became only the sixth NFL player in the Super Bowl era to win the receiving triple crown.

SLEEPERS

LUTHER BURDEN, BEARS

The Bears used the ninth overall pick of the 2024 NFL Draft on wideout Rome Odunze, but that was prior to Ben Johnson taking over as the team's head coach. The first receiver Chicago drafted last year was Burden, with the 39th overall pick. "We need to continue to get the ball in his hands as often as we possibly can," Johnson said of Burden at the NFL annual meetings in late March.

JAMESON WILLIAMS, LIONS

With Josh Reynolds having departed Detroit prior to the 2024 season, Williams carved out a significant role as the deep threat in the Lions' passing game. He's an explosive playmaker, both downfield and as a catch-and-run threat, and his ability to consistently threaten the top of opposing defenses makes him an ideal complement to Amon-Ra St. Brown and tight end Sam LaPorta.

PARKER WASHINGTON, JAGUARS

Washington entered Jacksonville's Week 16 showdown in Denver with three touchdowns and per-game averages of 5.5 targets, 3.3 receptions and 41.7 yards over his first dozen games of 2025. He then scored three times while posting per-game averages of 10.3 targets, 6.5 catches and 113.5 yards over his final four games, which included a 107-yard effort in a playoff loss to Buffalo.

(1) Chase, Ja'Marr BENGALS

The Bengals employ a West Coast passing game that relies heavily on rhythm and timing to create catch-and-run opportunities underneath—it's an approach that suits quarterback Joe Burrow. Chase, who was Burrow's top target during the quarterback's record-setting 2019 season at LSU, has proven over his first five pro seasons to be an ideal fit as well.

(2) Nacua, Puka RAMS

Nacua took over as the top target in the Rams' passing game early in 2023 while Cooper Kupp was sidelined with a hamstring injury for the first four games of Nacua's rookie season. Even after Kupp returned that October, Nacua remained the preferred target for quarterback Matthew Stafford, and he has been the focal point of the team's prolific passing game ever since.

(3) St. Brown, Amon-Ra LIONS

A fourth-round pick in the 2021 NFL Draft who fits the mold of a catch-and-run slot receiver, St. Brown possesses a skill set that complements the strengths of Lions quarterback Jared Goff. He has been at his best over his first five NFL seasons at the short and intermediate levels, where he shows a great feel for stemming his routes and setting up defensive backs to create separation.

(4) Smith-Njigba, Jaxon SEAHAWKS

The first receiver selected in the 2023 NFL Draft, Smith-Njigba offers the kind of savvy, between-the-numbers possession target Seattle had lacked prior to his arrival. Although the Seahawks are expected to remain a run-first offense under new offensive coordinator Brian Fleury, Smith-Njigba thrived in a similar system in 2025 as the focal point of Seattle's passing game.

(5) Collins, Nico TEXANS

A supersized target with the physicality to match his size, Collins dominated at times over C.J. Stroud's first three seasons as the Texans' quarterback. Collins shows some suddenness off the line of scrimmage, allowing him to escape the jam, and he does a nice job selling double moves. He enters the 2026 regular season as the clear-cut top option in Houston's passing game.

(6) London, Drake FALCONS

After Atlanta's poor quarterback play hindered London's production over the receiver's first two pro seasons, that changed with the team's signing of Kirk Cousins prior to the 2024 season. London then averaged more than 75 receiving yards per game for the first time as a pro during a 2025 regular season in which injuries limited him to 12 games.

(7) Lamb, CeeDee COWBOYS

Lamb led the NFL in targets in 2023, and in 2024 he averaged more than 10 targets per game for a second straight season. Although he remained the top option in the Dallas passing game under the team's new coaching regime in 2025, he was slowed by injuries and had George Pickens eat into his target share. Lamb's days of surpassing 150 targets are likely behind him.

(8) Jefferson, Justin VIKINGS

Jefferson has established himself over his first five NFL seasons as the clear-cut top option in Minnesota's passing game. With quarterback Sam Darnold having departed for Seattle, Jefferson's fantasy value in his sixth pro season in 2025 was decimated by the abysmal play of J.J. McCarthy and Minnesota's other quarterbacks. The arrival of Kyler Murray should help Jefferson in 2026.

(9) Nabers, Malik GIANTS

The departure of running back Saquon Barkley to Philadelphia prior to the 2024 season created some opportunities for the Giants' receiving corps after Barkley had averaged 5.4 targets per game over his five seasons in New York. The Giants landed a true No. 1 receiver in Nabers, the No. 6 pick of the '24 NFL Draft, who should be fully recovered from the knee injury he suffered last fall.

(10) Olave, Chris SAINTS

The No. 11 pick in the 2022 NFL Draft, Olave tracks the ball naturally downfield—he has speed and knows how to use it, and he has shown a natural feel for improvising when his quarterback is forced to make second-reaction plays. He's coming off a 2025 season in which he posted career-best receiving numbers across the board.

(11) Rice, Rashee CHIEFS

After emerging as the Chiefs' top wideout toward the end of the 2023 regular season, Rice had a promising start to 2024 during which he averaged eight catches and 96 yards over Kansas City's first three games before suffering a season-ending knee injury in Week 4. He was suspended for the first six games of 2025 for his role in a March 2024 high-speed car crash.

(12) Wilson, Garrett JETS

The No. 10 overall pick of the 2022 NFL Draft, Wilson has been explosive at the line of scrimmage over his first four pro seasons. His initial quickness makes him difficult to press, and he gets into his routes with relative ease. In 2024, he became the seventh player in NFL history to reach 80 receptions in each of his first three pro seasons. His 2025 was derailed by a knee sprain.

(13) Brown, A.J.

The acquisition of Brown in 2022 suggested that the Eagles were committed to building out a passing attack that would work deeper down the field than in 2021. That turned out to be the case, as Brown topped 80 receiving yards per game in each of his first three seasons in Philadelphia. He wore out his welcome while averaging less than 70 receiving yards per game last season.

(14) Pickens, George COWBOYS

Pickens is a contested-catch artist with the ability to dominate downfield. A bit of a one-trick pony over his first three NFL seasons, his role expanded in 2025 after he was traded to Dallas. The expectation is that a healthy CeeDee Lamb will begin the 2026 regular season as the No. 1 option in the Dallas passing game and continue to get most of the team's manufactured touches.

(15) Higgins, Tee BENGALS

Adept at tracking the ball down on the boundary, Higgins' size allows him to win in contested-catch situations. His build-up speed is enough to take the top off a defense, and his catch radius is enormous. As the No. 2 target behind Ja'Marr Chase in Cincinnati's passing game, Higgins should be better in 2026 if both he and quarterback Joe Burrow stay healthier than they did in 2025.

(16) McMillan, Tetairoa PANTHERS

The first receiver and eighth player selected in the 2025 NFL Draft, McMillan established himself last season as the top target in Carolina's passing game. His 2025 NFL Offensive Rookie of the Year performance followed a pair of extremely productive collegiate seasons—McMillan averaged more than 100 receiving yards per game at Arizona in both 2023 and 2024.

(17) Smith, DeVonta EAGLES

Smith has demonstrated an understanding for leveraging defensive backs over his five pro seasons, and he often creates separation with ease. He adjusts well to off-target throws and gives quarterback Jalen Hurts a larger downfield catch radius than Smith's size might suggest. He's expected to take over for A.J. Brown as Philadelphia's top target in 2026.

(18) Flowers, Zay RAVENS

Flowers has shown over his first three pro seasons that he combines the long speed to threaten defenses over the top with the quick, fluid athleticism to get in and out of sharp breaks. He has also exhibited an innate feel for tempo as a route-runner, which helped Flowers emerge as the Ravens' most targeted receiver in each of the past three seasons.

(19) Burden, Luther BEARS

The Bears used the ninth overall pick of the 2024 NFL Draft on wideout Rome Odunze, but that was prior to Ben Johnson taking over as the team's head coach. The first receiver Chicago drafted last year was Burden, with the 39th overall pick. "We need to continue to get the ball in his hands as often as we possibly can," Johnson said of Burden at the NFL annual meetings in late March.

(20) Adams, Davante RAMS

Adams the past four seasons has continued to line up all over the formation, similar to how he did throughout most of his eight years in Green Bay. After having started his pro career by scoring only four times over his first 29 NFL games, Adams has established himself as one of the league's top threats near the goal line—he led all NFL receivers with 14 touchdowns in 2025.

(21) Williams, Jameson LIONS

With Josh Reynolds having departed Detroit prior to the 2024 season, Williams carved out a significant role as the deep threat in the Lions' passing game. He's an explosive playmaker, both downfield and as a catch-and-run threat, and his ability to consistently threaten the top of opposing defenses makes him an ideal complement to Amon-Ra St. Brown and tight end Sam LaPorta.

(22) Egbuka, Emeka BUCCANEERS

After running 75 percent of his Ohio State routes from the slot, Egbuka was expected to be a slot-only receiver for Tampa Bay as a rookie. The 19th overall pick of the 2025 NFL Draft ended up lining up all over the formation, partly out of necessity after injuries ravaged the Buccaneers' receiving corps and partly because he has the versatility to be able to do so.

McLaurin returns as the best player among the Commanders' receiving corps, and his ability to separate down the field worked well with the arm strength of quarterback Jayden Daniels the last time both were healthy for an extended period of time. After having averaged five touchdowns per year over his first five pro seasons, McLaurin scored 13 times in 2024.

Targets were up for grabs in the Chargers' passing game with both Keenan Allen and Mike Williams having departed prior to the 2024 season, and McConkey accumulated more than his fair share during an impressive rookie showing. He'll look to rebound this coming season after a disappointing 2025 during which he averaged fewer than 50 receiving yards per game.

It was opined in the 2023 edition of this publication that Evans' production would likely suffer with quarterback Tom Brady no longer feeding him the ball as Tampa Bay turned to a more conservative offense with Baker Mayfield under center. Instead, Evans topped 1,200 yards in 2023 for the first time since '18. He gets a fresh start in San Fran after an injury-marred 2025.

(26) Waddle, Jaylen BRONCOS

Waddle proved in 2022 to be a threat as soon as he gets the ball on tunnel screens and in run-after-catch situations, increasing his per-reception average by more than eight yards over his rookie season. He hasn't been nearly as efficient the past three seasons, because of both injuries and Miami's poor quarterback play. He's now in a much better spot in Denver.

(27) Watson, Christian PACKERS

Pairing elite size with outstanding speed, Watson has the ability to take the top off an opposing defense. While the threat of his speed leads to easy separation on hitches and stop routes, he has a bad habit of body-catching the ball in traffic, which limits his effectiveness in the red zone. Expect most of his touchdowns to continue to come on deeps balls.

(29) Thomas, Brian JAGUARS

A first-round selection in the 2024 NFL Draft, Thomas brings pure speed to Jacksonville's offense. He showed as a rookie that he has the ability to catch up to some of the near-misses downfield that had plagued the Jaguars' passing game in prior seasons, but his usage and effectiveness cratered in 2025 in Liam Coen's first season as Jacksonville's head coach.

The ninth overall pick of the 2024 NFL Draft spent his rookie season sharing targets with veterans D.J. Moore and Keenan Allen. With both players no longer in Chicago, the expectation is that Odunze will be targeted more frequently in 2026. His main competition for targets is a pair of second-year players in wideout Luther Burden and tight end Colston Loveland.

He'll retain his role in the Colts' passing game after Indianapolis re-signed him to a four-year, $116 million deal in early March. After being acquired by Pittsburgh in early March for a late-round pick swap, Pittman was signed by the Steelers to a three-year, $59 million extension. Despite Pittsburgh's regime change to new head coach Mike McCarthy, the Steelers' passing game will likely remain conservative.

(33) Metcalf, D.K. STEELERS

The expectation for 2025 had been that the Steelers would get Metcalf the ball on more manufactured touches than the Seahawks had in prior seasons. That did not materialize the way many had envisioned, and Metcalf's fantasy upside will remain somewhat limited in what's expected to be a conservative passing game under new head coach Mike McCarthy in 2026.

(34) Tyson, Jordyn SAINTS

The eighth overall pick in the 2026 NFL Draft, Tyson enters the league with considerable upside. Even at 6-foot-2 and more than 200 pounds, he tends to play bigger than his size. The risk from a fantasy standpoint is Tyson's health, as he dealt with hamstring injuries in 2025 and was also sidelined for most of the pre-draft process because of hamstring issues.

(35) Washington, Parker JAGUARS

Washington entered Jacksonville's Week 16 showdown in Denver with three touchdowns and per-game averages of 5.5 targets, 3.3 receptions and 41.7 yards over his first dozen games of 2025. He then scored three times while posting per-game averages of 10.3 targets, 6.5 catches and 113.5 yards over his final four games, which included a 107-yard effort in a playoff loss to Buffalo.

(36) Moore, D.J. BILLS

Acquired by the Bills along with a fifth-round pick from the Bears in exchange for a second-round pick, Moore is expected to begin the 2026 season as the top target in Buffalo's passing game. He does the bulk of his damage in the intermediate parts of the field, where windows should open up with defenses having to respect the running ability of quarterback Josh Allen.

(37) Sutton, Courtland BRONCOS

The thought four years ago was that Sutton would benefit from the Broncos' upgrade to Russell Wilson at quarterback—Sutton's downfield ability had gone to waste with Teddy Bridgewater under center the prior season. After the struggles of Denver's passing game under Wilson in 2022 and '23, Sutton turned in back-to-back solid seasons in 2024 and '25 with Bo Nix under center.

(38) Godwin, Chris BUCCANEERS

While Emeka Egbuka is expected to spend most of his time in 2026 lined up on the outside, Godwin will continue to be more of a possession receiver who could end up leading Tampa Bay in targets out of the slot. Although he has been limited to 16 games over the past two seasons, Godwin is expected to be fully healthy heading into the 2026 regular season.

(39) Harrison, Marvin CARDINALS

Harrison had a reputation as one of the savviest collegiate receivers in recent memory when Arizona selected him with the fourth overall pick of the 2024 NFL Draft. He was unspectacular during an up-and-down rookie season, however, and was then even less productive in 2025, when injuries limited him to a dozen games.

(40) Meyers, Jakobi JAGUARS

Meyers scored more touchdowns in 2023 than he had over his 60 games in New England. Although he has scored only seven times over 31 games in the two seasons since then, all three of his touchdown receptions in 2025 came after he was traded from the Raiders to the Jaguars last November. He's part of a crowded Jacksonville receiving corps heading into the 2026 season.

(41) Shakir, Khalil BILLS

Buffalo's trade of Stefon Diggs to Houston prior to the 2024 season opened the door for Shakir to play a bigger role in the team's passing game. He responded with the best statistical season of his pro career before regressing a bit in 2025. His fantasy upside will be somewhat limited in 2026 by the presence of D.J. Moore, who was acquired by the Bills in early March.

Signed by the Patriots in March to a four-year, $80 million contract, Doubs could end up replacing the production New England received from Stefon Diggs in 2025. Doubs is a versatile receiver with the potential to help the Patriots improve their efficiency in the red zone in 2026—20 of his 23 career touchdowns (including playoffs) have come in the red zone.

TREY McBRIDE
Showing excellent chemistry with Cardinals quarterback Jacoby Brissett throughout last season, McBride was football's top tight end in 2025.

SLEEPERS

CHIGOZIEM OKONKWO, COMMANDERS

A catch-and-run weapon who also has enough speed to sneak up the seam, Okonkwo played fewer than 400 snaps as a rookie in 2022 before ending the 2023 season on a high note with 27 receptions for 322 yards over his final seven games. He then regressed a bit in 2024 and struggled along with the rest of Tennessee's passing game in 2025. He now gets a fresh start in Washington.

ISAIAH LIKELY, GIANTS

Likely proved in 2024 that he can be a bit more than just a cog in the passing game. He made a number of big contested catches, but his fantasy upside remained limited with Mark Andrews serving as the Ravens' top tight end. Likely regressed in 2025, however, with the least productive season of his NFL career. One of head coach John Harbaugh's first moves after leaving for New York was to sign Likely to play a prominent role in the Giants' offense in 2026.

TERRANCE FERGUSON, RAMS

On a team with several serviceable tight ends, Ferguson is expected to be the top target at the position in 2026 over Tyler Higbee, Colby Parkinson and Davis Allen. Because he's as part of a Rams passing game that also includes wideouts Puka Nacua and Davante Adams, Ferguson does enter the 2026 regular season with a lower fantasy floor than a lot of the tight ends ranked ahead of him.

(1) McBride, Trey CARDINALS

A big target over the middle who demonstrates an understanding of route-running nuances, McBride showed excellent chemistry with Cardinals quarterback Jacoby Brissett throughout last season. He was football's most productive tight end, and there's no reason why he should not be considered the favorite to lead the position in fantasy points again in 2026.

(2) Bowers, Brock RAIDERS

Whereas in the past it would typically take tight ends a couple of seasons before making significant statistical contributions, that's no longer the case in today's NFL: Bowers capitalized on his opportunity to contribute immediately as a rookie in 2024. Expect his numbers to improve after a 2025 season in which he was slowed by injuries.

(3) Kraft, Tucker PACKERS

After struggling over the first half of his rookie season, Kraft emerged as a near-every-down player during Green Bay's 2023 late-season surge. Then in 2024, he was one of only two NFL tight ends along with George Kittle to average more than 14 yards per reception on at least 25 catches. Kraft was even better in 2025 before suffering a torn ACL in early November.

(4) LaPorta, Sam LIONS

After moving on from T.J. Hockenson prior to the 2022 trade deadline, the Lions found their replacement in the second round of the 2023 NFL Draft in LaPorta. He regressed a bit in 2024 after one of the most productive seasons ever by a rookie NFL tight end, and then injuries limited him to only nine games in 2025. He enters 2026 with considerable fantasy upside.

Warren is one of four current NFL tight ends along with Pat Freiermuth, Brenton Strange and Theo Johnson who was on Penn State's 2020 roster, and he showed during an impressive rookie season that he's the best of the group. The 14th pick of the 2025 NFL Draft, Warren will likely be targeted even more in 2026 with Michael Pittman having been traded to Pittsburgh.

The Browns were able to steal Fannin in the third round of the 2025 NFL Draft after he had led the nation in 2024 in receptions, receiving yards, receptions per game and receiving yards per game, all of which were single-season records among FBS tight ends. He emerged as the top option in Cleveland's passing game as a rookie and figures to play a similar role in 2026.

(7) Pitts, Kyle FALCONS

The Falcons' new coaching staff in 2024 moved Pitts around the formation more often than he did with Arthur Smith as his head coach, but the statistical production continued to be underwhelming for the 2021 fourth overall pick. Although he was then much more productive in 2025, a lot of his output came when catching passes from Kirk Cousins, who is now a Raider.

Gadsden enjoyed a prolific college career at Syracuse, where he became the school's all-time leader in career receptions and receiving yards by a tight end after having spent the 2021 season as a wide receiver. A fifth-round pick in the 2025 NFL Draft, he broke out over a four-game stretch starting in mid-October during which he caught 24 of 27 targets for 377 yards and a pair of scores.

Bears head coach Ben Johnson was the offensive coordinator in Detroit when Sam LaPorta caught 86 passes for 889 yards and 10 touchdowns as a rookie in 2022. Although Loveland wasn't quite that productive in his first pro season, the 10th overall pick of the 2025 NFL Draft immediately stepped into a key role in Chicago's passing game.

(10) Kelce, Travis CHIEFS

Remarkably consistent for a long stretch of productive seasons, Kelce had surpassed 120 targets and 90 receptions in seven straight years prior to 2025. His yardage and scoring totals have declined the past three seasons, and he has slowed enough that he's no longer in the conversation as one of fantasy football's top tight ends.

(11) Andrews, Mark RAVENS

Running a good portion of his routes from the slot the past few seasons, Andrews will again be one of the top targets in Baltimore's passing game. Quarterback Lamar Jackson remains most comfortable working the middle of the field, and Andrews is effective when it comes to uncovering during scramble drills. He also tends to draw a lot of targets in the red zone.

(12) Kittle, George 49ERS

It was Kittle's yards-per-catch average that had set him apart from his peers in the two seasons prior to 2025; after having been the only NFL tight end to surpass 1,000 yards in 2023, his 14.2 yards per catch in '24 was tops among tight ends with 15 or more receptions. The hope for 2026 is that he'll return in October after having suffered a torn Achilles in January.

(13) Goedert, Dallas EAGLES

Goedert bounced back from an injury-riddled 2020 season with a solid '21 in which he set career-best marks with 830 receiving yards and an average of 14.8 yards per catch. Although his production has slipped since, that's due in part due to him missing time with injuries. He did surpass 10 touchdown receptions in 2025 after never having had more than five in any prior season.

Henry's 17 red-zone targets led New England in 2021, as he tallied half of the team's 16 red-zone touchdown receptions that season. His role in the passing game diminished in 2022 and failed to recover in '23. But Henry bounced back in 2024 with career-best marks in both receptions and yards before surpassing 700 receiving yards in '25 for the first time in his nine NFL seasons.

Ever since coming on strong as his rookie season progressed in 2023, Kincaid has battled injuries while falling well short of expectations.

The No. 16 overall pick of the 2026 NFL Draft, Sadiq was the only tight end selected in the first round. He's a big-play threat whose 13 gains of 20 or more yards for Oregon last season ranked second among college tight ends. After spending his rookie season as the Cowboys' No. 2 tight end to Dalton Schultz, Ferguson ascended to the top of the Dallas depth chart in 2023 after Schultz departed for Houston. Although his yards-per-catch averages have fallen in each of the past two seasons, he scored more touchdowns in 2025 than he had scored in each of his first three pro seasons combined.

(21) Johnson, Juwan SAINTS

The Saints' trade of Adam Trautman to Denver prior to the 2023 season left Johnson atop the team's tight end depth chart. More of a supersized receiver, he ended up seeing an uptick in production in 2024 while reaching 50 catches in a season for the first time in his pro career. He then posted career-high totals in targets, receptions and receiving yards in 2025.

(22) Otton, Cade BUCCANEERS

Otton emerged as the Buccaneers' starting tight end in 2023 before retaining his spot atop the depth chart the following season. He posted career-best marks in targets, receptions and yards in 2024 despite missing three games because of injury. His per-game averages fell last season, but there's a chance they could rebound in 2026 with wideout Mike Evans no longer in Tampa Bay.

(23) Schultz, Dalton TEXANS

Prior to signing Schultz in 2023, the Texans hadn't rostered a reliable tight end since the days of Owen Daniels. Schultz is coming off the most productive of his three seasons in Houston despite averaging fewer than 10 yards per reception in 2025. With wideout Tank Dell expected back after having missed all of last season, it's hard to envision Schultz surpassing 100 targets in 2026.

(24) Hockenson, T.J. VIKINGS

Hockenson's role in Detroit's passing game had shrunk before he was traded to Minnesota in November 2022. He averaged nearly nine targets per game after joining the Vikings, then was averaging 8.8 targets through 14 games before suffering a season-ending knee injury in the third quarter of his 15th game of 2023. His role has diminished severely the past two seasons.

(25) Strange, Brenton JAGUARS

A second-round pick in the 2023 NFL Draft, Strange is expected to remain atop Jacksonville's depth chart for a second straight season. He had a promising start to the 2025 season before suffering an October hip injury that landed him on injured reserve. He's unlikely to average more than five targets per game in 2026 for an offense with several quality options at wide receiver.

(26) Freiermuth, Pat STEELERS

No NFL tight end drew more red-zone targets than the 20 that went in Freiermuth's direction in 2021, but he ended up being less of a red-zone option for Pittsburgh in 2022. After his production in '23 suffered because of a hamstring injury that sidelined him for five games, he bounced back with solid production in 2024. Last season, however, was another disappointing one.

On the Ground

The third overall pick in April's NFL Draft, Jeremiyah Love became the first running back to be selected among the first five picks since Saquon Barkley was drafted second by the Giants in 2018. Expect Love to make an immediate impact in Arizona's backfield. When Tyler Allgeier signed a two-year, $12.25 million deal in early March, he had reason to believe that he would begin the 2026 regular season as Arizona's lead running back. A big-bodied runner with excellent contact balance, he will instead share backfield duties with Love. James Conner, whose 2025 season ended in Week 3 when he suffered a foot injury, will begin the 2026 regular season in a reserve role. When the Cardinals selected Trey Benson in the third round of the 2024 NFL Draft, he was thought to be the heir apparent to Conner. That is obviously no longer the case.

Through the Air

Jacoby Brissett began the 2025 regular season as Arizona's No. 2 quarterback behind Kyler Murray, but he ended it as the team's starter. Expect him to once again deliver a handful of quality performances with intriguing talent among his supporting cast. Tight end Trey McBride is a big target over the middle who demonstrates an understanding of route-running nuances. He showed excellent chemistry with Brissett throughout last season and was football's most productive tight end by a wide margin. When the Cardinals drafted Marvin Harrison with the fourth overall pick in the 2024 NFL Draft he was believed to be the total package in terms of physical traits. Over his first two pro seasons, however, Harrison has consistently struggled to create separation. The thought prior to the start of last season was that Michael Wilson would be little more than a role player as a downfield threat, but he ended up being Arizona's most productive wideout in 2025.

On the Ground

Bijan Robinson is an ideal back for the zone running scheme Atlanta will continue to employ in 2026 under new head coach Kevin Stefanski and offensive coordinator Tommy Rees. That doesn't necessarily mean Bijan is in line for 300 carries in 2026. That's because Brian Robinson, who was signed in late March to a one-year, $2.5 million deal, is also a prototypical back for a run game built on wide-zone principles and layered with timely gap concepts. The Falcons will live with the downgrade for 10 carries per week if it means keeping their 24-year-old superstar fresh.

Through the Air

The eighth overall pick of the 2024 NFL Draft, Michael Penix began his pro career as a backup before taking over as the Falcons' starter for the final three games of his rookie season. He is expected to be healthy for the start of the 2026 regular season after his 2025 was cut short by a knee injury he suffered in November, but Atlanta did sign Tua Tagovailoa to a one-year deal to be the starter if Penix's health continues to be a concern. Drake London is the kind of big-bodied receiver who should continue to dominate on in-breaking routes in a scheme like the one Stefanski and Rees will likely employ. London averaged more than 75 receiving yards per game for the first time as a pro during a 2025 regular season in which injuries limited him to 12 games. Tight end Kyle Pitts is expected to once again serve more as a big receiver than a traditional tight end. Although Pitts had one of his most productive seasons in 2025, a lot of his output came when catching passes from quarterback Kirk Cousins, who has departed for Las Vegas. While Jahan Dotson will provide a deep boundary threat to complement London, Zachariah Branch, a third-round pick in April's draft, is expected to begin the 2026 regular season as the Falcons' slot receiver.

On the Ground

Derrick Henry is primarily a zone runner, and that has been reflected in the Ravens' play-calling the past two seasons. Henry has benefited on stretch plays when opposing defenses have to hold defenders on the back side to respect quarterback Lamar Jackson's ability to keep it. Henry is capable of not only running through contact, but also showing off impressive speed in the open field, which allows him to frequently break off long runs. He'll continue to thrive in Baltimore's diverse and formidable rushing attack. Adam Randall, a fifth-round pick in April's draft, was converted to running back after beginning his career at Clemson as a wide receiver. He has a chance to being the 2026 regular season as Baltimore's No. 2 back behind Henry.

Through the Air

Despite the overhaul to Baltimore's coaching staff, expect the Ravens' passing game to continue to be concentrated in the middle of the field under new offensive coordinator Declan Doyle. Zay Flowers, a first-round pick in the 2023 NFL Draft, has consistently delivered while operating between the numbers, which is where Jackson is most comfortable throwing. With tight end Isaiah Likely having left to join John Harbaugh in New York, Mark Andrews could end up playing an even bigger role in 2026 than when he was sharing snaps with Likely. Rashod Bateman was used almost exclusively on deep shots the past two seasons, a role that fourth-round rookie Elijah Sarratt could assume in 2026.

On the Ground

James Cook, a second-round pick in the 2022 draft, emerged as the leader in the Bills' backfield in 2023, with exactly three times as many rushing attempts as the next highest total among Buffalo's backs. While there had been talk prior to each of the past couple of seasons that the Bills planned to lighten Cook's workload, he topped 300 carries for the first time in 2025 and ended up leading the NFL in rushing yards. So until there's reason to believe otherwise, both Ray Davis and Ty Johnson will continue to have relatively small complementary roles. All-Pro quarterback Josh Allen will obviously continue to carry the ball frequently in the tight red zone.

Through the Air

When new head coach Joe Brady replaced the fired Ken Dorsey as Buffalo's offensive coordinator in November 2023, the general idea was that Allen and the offense needed to be "reined in." Despite the fact that opponents had a full offseason to study Brady's approach prior to the start of 2024, Allen earned NFL MVP honors. Buffalo's trade of Stefon Diggs to Houston prior to the 2024 season opened the door for Khalil Shakir to play a bigger role in the team's passing game. It will likely be DJ Moore, who was acquired in March along with a fifth-round draft pick in exchange for a second-round pick, who enters the 2026 season as Buffalo's primary target. Tight end Dalton Kincaid has yet to raise his game to the level that many expected after he was a first-round pick in the '23 draft. Keon Coleman, the first pick of the 2024 NFL Draft's second round, has been a colossal bust.

On the Ground

Prior to his arrival in Carolina, Panthers head coach Dave Canales had spent most of his coaching career in Seattle, where for much of the later years the Seahawks used a tandem system. Carolina had brought in Miles Sanders prior to the 2023 season to be their starting back, but it was Chuba Hubbard who ascended to the top spot on Carolina's depth chart that October. Rico Dowdle, who was signed in March 2025, ended up outplaying Hubbard last season. With Dowdle having since departed for Pittsburgh, Hubbard's main competition for carries in 2026 is expected to be Jonathon Brooks. A second-round pick and the first running back selected in the 2024 NFL Draft, Brooks missed all of 2025 after undergoing surgery to repair a torn ACL he suffered in 2024—the same ACL he had torn in 2023 during his final college season at Texas.

Through the Air

The Panthers use a lot of spread concepts tied to quicker timing passes—Bryce Young thrived as a timing passer while at Alabama and showed some promise in that area the past two seasons after an absolutely brutal rookie year. Young isn't going to become an All-Pro anytime soon, but Canales has given him as good a chance as anyone could've to build on some of that success and take another step in the right direction. Tetairoa McMillan, the eighth overall pick in the 2025 NFL Draft and winner of last season's Offensive Rookie of the Year award, was the only first-year player to surpass 1,000 receiving yards in 2025. He will remain the clear-cut top target in Carolina's passing game. Jalen Coker profiles as a capable downfield threat but he has missed a dozen games over his first two NFL seasons. Xavier Legette, the final pick of the first round in the 2024 NFL Draft, will battle third-round rookie Chris Brazzell for the job as Carolina's No. 3 wideout.

On the Ground

Before he became Chicago's head coach prior to last season, Ben Johnson was the offensive coordinator of a Detroit team with a running game that went heavy on mid- and inside-zone. The Bears' revamped offensive line—Chicago traded for guards Jonah Jackson and Joe Thuney and signed center Drew Dalman prior to the 2025 season—gave them the personnel up front to make it work. While D'Andre Swift is an underrated inside runner, Kyle Monangai carved out a role as an effective short-yardage option after the Bears selected him in the seventh round of the 2025 NFL Draft.

Through the Air

Expect the Bears to continue to run plenty of play-action to get third-year quarterback Caleb Williams comfortable, but Johnson also worked in more quick-game and spread concepts a season ago. Chicago also unveiled a robust collection of the RPO looks Johnson likes to dial up, which provided some easier throws for Williams. Rome Odunze, the ninth overall selection in the 2024 NFL Draft, is an elite contested-catch threat who has seemed to be at his best over his first two pro seasons when Williams has extended plays and looked downfield. The first wideout the Bears drafted in 2025 was Luther Burden, who figures to play a much bigger role than he did as a rookie now that DJ Moore is no longer in Chicago. ("We need to continue to get the ball in his hands as often as we possibly can," Johnson said of Burden at the NFL annual meetings in late March.) Johnson was the offensive coordinator in Detroit when tight end Sam LaPorta caught 86 passes for 889 yards and 10 touchdowns as a rookie in 2022. Although Colston Loveland wasn't quite that productive in his first pro season, the 2025 draft's 10th overall pick did play a significant role in the Bears' passing game.

On the Ground

After the Joe Mixon era ended in Cincinnati, the Bengals had planned on going with a two-back attack with Zack Moss and Chase Brown splitting the traditional rushing workload in 2024. Moss held a slight edge in a 1-and-1A workload situation early that season before Brown seized control of the backfield after a midseason neck injury ended up sidelining Moss for the remainder of 2024. Brown picked up in 2025 where he had left off the previous season, operating as a reliable workhorse back in Cincinnati's backfield. Samaje Perine returned to the Bengals on a two-year deal prior to last season, and he beat rookie Tahj Brooks for the role as Brown's backup. The expectation is that Perine will keep his No. 2 role for the start of the 2026 regular season.

Through the Air

The Bengals employ a West Coast passing game that relies heavily on rhythm and timing to create catch-and-run opportunities underneath. It's an approach that suits Joe Burrow—Ja'Marr Chase, who was Burrow's top target during the quarterback's record-setting 2019 season at LSU, has proven over his first five NFL seasons to be an ideal fit as well. Tee Higgins was productive enough in 2024 to land a four-year, $115 million contract prior to last season. Adept at tracking the ball down on the boundary, Higgins' size allows him to win in contested-catch situations. His build-up speed is enough to take the top off a defense, and his catch radius is enormous. As the No. 2 target alongside Chase in Cincinnati's passing game, Higgins should be more productive in 2026 than he was last season as long as both he and Burrow stay healthier than they did in 2025. Mike Gesicki will likely once again be the only Cincinnati tight end with a chance to be statistically relevant during the 2026 regular season.

On the Ground

Cleveland selected Quinshon Judkins with the 36th overall pick of the 2025 NFL Draft. Explosive and versatile in open space, Judkins is able to make defenders miss despite lacking elite athleticism. After an outstanding freshman season at Ole Miss in which he topped 1,500 rushing yards, Judkins regressed as a sophomore before transferring to Ohio State. He'll begin 2026 where he spent most of 2025, which is atop Cleveland's depth chart as the team's primary early-down back. Dylan Sampson was selected in the fourth round of the 2025 NFL Draft and spent most of his rookie season playing behind Judkins. Sampson averaged an abysmal 2.7 yards on 65 carries in 2025.

Through the Air

It was football legend John Madden who once said, "If you have two quarterbacks, you actually have none," so one can only imagine what he might say about the state of the position in Cleveland entering the 2026 regular season. Shedeur Sanders, a fifth-round selection in the 2025 NFL Draft, is considered the favorite to win the starting job over oft-injured veteran Deshaun Watson and Dillon Gabriel, who was drafted two rounds prior to Sanders in 2025. Jerry Jeudy worked deep more frequently the past two seasons than he had in Denver over his first four seasons as a pro, and he will likely do so again in 2026. First-round rookie KC Concepcion is expected to be the No. 2 wideout with second-round rookie Denzel Boston in the No. 3 role. The top option in the passing game will be tight end Harold Fannin, who led the team with 72 receptions as a rookie in 2025.

On the Ground

Looking fully healthy last season for the first time since he was a rookie in 2021, Javonte Williams demonstrated great feel for tempo and understanding of play designs in his first season in Dallas. He consistently allowed creases to develop before taking advantage. He looked sturdy and rarely went down on first contact, both when he was powering through tackles and when he was lowering his shoulder to take defenders on with a head of steam. He's a smooth mover who doesn't look like a burner but consistently outruns angles. Williams enters the 2026 regular season as the unquestioned leader of the Cowboys' backfield.

Through the Air

While Dak Prescott's 2024 was a lost year because of an injury that cost him more than half the season, there had been plenty to like about his 2023. His fantasy value got a big boost from a pass-heavy approach in the red zone: He led the NFL in red-zone passing attempts and passing touchdowns in 2023, which was Brian Schottenheimer's first season as the Cowboys' offensive coordinator. In Schottenheimer's first season as the team's head coach in 2025, Prescott was one of only three NFL quarterbacks to surpass 4,500 passing yards and one of only four to reach 30 touchdown passes. One of the Cowboys' strengths the past three seasons has been finding creative ways of deploying CeeDee Lamb. It had been a struggle for the other receivers lining up alongside Lamb, which is what prompted Dallas to acquire George Pickens in a trade with the Steelers prior to last season. A bit of a one-trick pony over his first three NFL seasons, Pickens thrived with the expanded role he assumed in Dallas. He proved to be a contested-catch artist with the ability to dominate downfield.

On the Ground

With Javonte Williams having departed for Dallas prior to last season, RJ Harvey entered the 2025 regular season with a chance to play a significant role in Denver's backfield. The second-round pick in the 2025 NFL Draft had been extremely productive at UCF, where he showed a nose for the end zone with 25 touchdowns in 2024. As an NFL rookie, however, Harvey ended up splitting carries with oft-injured JK Dobbins, and that figures to be the case again in 2026. Also factoring into the backfield mix will be fourth-round rookie Jonah Coleman, about whom Broncos assistant general manager Reed Burckhardt said in late April, "We really like his run style, his ability between the tackles as a finisher."

Through the Air

Bo Nix, the sixth quarterback selected in the 2024 NFL Draft, has gone a long way to proving the past two seasons that Broncos head coach Sean Payton is indeed capable of developing a quarterback not named Drew Brees. Nix is a quick decision-maker who has been better working between the numbers and underneath over his first two pro seasons—that skillset fits well with what Payton wants to do—than he's been at driving throws outside the numbers. Courtland Sutton has been able to save Denver's offense at times with his contested-catch ability. The switch at quarterback from Russell Wilson to Nix two seasons ago led to more opportunities on in-breaking routes between the numbers, giving Sutton a higher volume of targets. His target share will likely drop in 2026 with Jaylen Waddle having arrived in a March trade with Miami. The fact that Denver acquired Waddle and a 2026 fourth-round pick in exchange for first-, third- and fourth-round picks suggests the team has big plans for the way they intend to utilize Waddle in 2026.

On the Ground

The ground game defines Detroit's offense—from scheme to approach, there are many similarities to the prime years of the Saints' offense, where current Lions head coach Dan Campbell cut his teeth under Sean Payton. They use multiple concepts up front and have the elite offensive-line talent to make it work. Then there's the pairing of backs, and their complementary skillsets. It's awfully similar to the Saints' old Mark Ingram-Alvin Kamara tandem, right down to the fact that opposing defenses would much rather see the "big" back (Ingram then, David Montgomery the past three seasons, Isiah Pacheco now) on the field than the pass-catching home-run threat (Kamara then, Jahmyr Gibbs now).

Through the Air

Although he struggles when pressured and moved off his spot, Jared Goff remains one of the NFL's best pure throwers and thrives from a clean pocket. Operating behind a Lions offensive line that's one of the NFL's best, he should have another big year, even with a collection of receivers that profiles as good but not quite elite. Amon-Ra St. Brown served as Goff's security blanket over his first two NFL seasons—2021 and 2022—piling up targets while working the short areas of the field. The addition of tight end Sam LaPorta prior to the 2023 season allowed St. Brown to work further downfield and increase his production. Expect St. Brown to continue to be the focal point of Detroit's passing game in 2026. Jameson Williams has a chance to take another step in his development, though he should be seen as a feast-or-famine home-run-only hitter until he proves otherwise. LaPorta is not exactly a YAC monster, but Goff's accuracy at the short and intermediate levels gives the tight end a chance to do some damage on the run. Gibbs, meanwhile, has emerged as he NFL's most dangerous pass-catching back.

On the Ground

The Packers moved on from Aaron Jones prior to the 2024 season and brought in Josh Jacobs, who fits Green Bay's zone-heavy approach—it's a scheme that has a lot in common with the one in which Jacobs played over his first three pro seasons for the Raiders. There was a question heading into that season of how much tread was left on the tires—there was a falloff after his 2022 rushing title season in which Jacobs had 393 touches—but he proved to be an upgrade over Jones as a better runner in traffic. Jacobs was then slowed by injuries during a 2025 season that wasn't quite as productive. With last season's primary backup Emanuel Wilson having departed for Seattle, the hope in Green Bay is that the Packers will get more out of Marshawn Lloyd, a third-round selection in the 2024 NFL Draft who has the potential to be dangerous in space.

Through the Air

The Packers run a version of the Shanahan offense that presents quarterback Jordan Love with defined reads and unmistakable throwing windows. It's an offense that can stress opposing defenses vertically and horizontally, and Love can do so while working from a number of different launching points. It's difficult to identify a true No. 1 among Green Bay's wideouts. Jayden Reed battled injuries late in the 2023 season before emerging in 2024 as the closest thing the Packers had to a No. 1 guy. Reed, however, was limited by injuries to seven games last season. The threat of Christian Watson's speed leads to easy separation on hitches and stop routes, but he has a bad habit of body-catching the ball in traffic. The Packers are hoping for more out of Matthew Golden, a first-round pick in the 2025 NFL Draft who struggled as a rookie. The star of Green Bay's passing game over the first half of last season was tight end Tucker Kraft, who is expected to be ready for Week 1 after suffering a torn ACL last November.

On the Ground

Texans offensive coordinator Nick Caley, who prior to last season became yet another former Rams assistant coach to land a job as a coordinator, has the offensive line to execute a classic zone-running scheme. It was ineffective enough last season that the Texans deemed it necessary to acquire David Montgomery in a March trade that sent offensive lineman Juice Scruggs to Detroit along with a pair of draft picks, including a 2026 fourth-rounder. Woody Marks is expected to begin the regular season as Houston's No. 2 running back a season after he led the team in rushing, albeit with an average of only 3.6 yards on 196 carries.

Through the Air

As a rookie in 2023, C.J. Stroud not only shined as a processor working over the linebacker level, but he sprinkled in the occasional Mahomes-ian escape to supplement it. Opponents did have a year of tape to look for vulnerabilities and an offseason to come up with a new plan against Stroud, and he wasn't nearly as effective in 2024 as he had been the previous year. And although his play in 2025 was better than it had been the prior season, it wasn't close to what he did as a rookie and will be best remembered for his mistake-filled play in back-to-back playoff games at Pittsburgh and New England. Nico Collins continued to thrive last season on the deep intermediate throws on which Stroud has been particularly effective over the past three years. The team landed a pair of Iowa State receivers in the 2025 draft, spending the 34th overall pick on Jayden Higgins and then the 79th selection on Jaylin Noel. While tight end Dalton Schultz isn't particularly dynamic, he is reliable over the middle of the field.

On the Ground

Jonathan Taylor looked much better in 2024 than he had in 2022 and '23; his contract is structured in a way that made it a coinflip as to whether Indy would keep him beyond that season, so there was no real reason for the team to hold back on his workload. Sure enough, Taylor ended up surpassing 300 carries despite the fact that he played in only 14 of the Colts' 17 games. He was then even better in 2025, leading the NFL with 20 total touchdowns while surpassing 1,500 rushing yards for the first time since 2021. Durability remains the big question mark with quarterback Daniel Jones, and that ties into his usage in the ground game. In an attempt to limit the hits Jones takes a season after he suffered a ruptured right Achilles tendon in December, Taylor would appear to be in no danger of losing carries to Jones down near the goal line.

Through the Air

Shane Steichen is as good as any NFL head coach at melding an 11-man run game with the passing game—he takes advantage of opportunities to attack downfield off play-action looks while working in some gadget-y quick-game concepts. After enjoying the most productive stretch of his career over the first half of 2025, Jones did begin to tail off prior to rupturing his Achilles. Josh Downs gives the team a vertical threat out of the slot and should open the 2026 regular season as the second receiver and a complement to Alec Pierce. With an average of 21.8 yards on his 84 catches since the start of the 2024 regular season, Pierce has established himself as the NFL's top deep threat. Tight end Tyler Warren, the 14th overall pick in the 2025 NFL Draft, demonstrated as a rookie that he has the ability to run a diverse route tree and gain chunks of yards after the catch.

On the Ground

It was some tough sledding for Travis Etienne in 2024—his decisions approaching the line weren't great, but it was also an offensive front that frequently failed to create running lanes. That changed drastically in offensive-minded head coach Liam Coen's first season in Jacksonville in 2025, in large part because the Jaguars' play-calling was much sharper than it had been under the prior regime. With Etienne having departed for New Orleans, the Jaguars are banking on Bhayshul Tuten, a fourth-round pick in the 2025 NFL Draft, to play a significant role in the team's 2026 backfield. A speedster whose 4.32-second 40-yard dash was tops among running backs in his draft class, Tuten will be complemented by the more bruising style of Chris Rodriguez, who was signed in March to a two-year contract.

Through the Air

The biggest criticism of Trevor Lawrence prior to Coen's arrival was that the quarterback went for too many shot plays—they weren't necessarily bad decisions, it was just that he too often chose the highest-payoff but also highest-difficulty throw on big downs, stalling drives that might have been kept alive had he gone the safer route. He showed in 2025 why he remains a generational talent, as he started to deliver consistent generational play. Jacksonville enters the 2026 regular season with a deep and diverse receiving corps that includes Parker Washington, Jakobi Meyers and Brian Thomas, a first-round pick in the 2024 NFL Draft with the ability to run down some of the near-misses downfield that had plagued this offense in prior seasons. Brenton Strange is an underrated tight end.

On the Ground

The Chiefs are banking on Kenneth Walker to take advantage of the lighter boxes that Kansas City's potent passing game tends to draw. The Chiefs re-hired Eric Bieniemy as their offensive coordinator after a three-year hiatus that included three destinations—the former NFL running back is expected to lean more on the ground game than Kansas City did a season ago. Such speculation is certainly supported by the fact that the three-year deal Walker signed in March is worth more than $43 million and includes $28.7 million in guaranteed money. Emmett Johnson, for whom Kansas City traded up to select in the fifth round of April's NFL Draft, will battle Emari Demercado to be the backup. Johnson's best chance for significant action as a rookie would appear to be as a passing-down back.

Through the Air

The recipe for one of the NFL's most effective passing games is a mix of Andy Reid's classic West Coast attack with spread elements, run-pass options and quarterback Patrick Mahomes' ability to improvise. All signs point to Mahomes being healthy for Week 1 after having suffered a torn ACL last December. Rashee Rice has shown when he's been on the field that he has enough speed to sneak behind a defense. Rice is at his best, however, as a contested-catch guy who began to thrive once he developed a rapport with Mahomes on out-of-structure plays. Tight end Travis Kelce will continue to benefit from the large spaces in the middle of the field creating easy wins against one-on-one coverage. Kelce has lost a step but can still move, and his chemistry with Mahomes remains off-the-charts. Xavier Worthy's speed means opponents must respect the downfield passing game, which should be more effective in 2026 with opposing defenses having to pay more attention to a running game that will be better with Walker.

Ashton Jeanty, the sixth overall pick of the 2025 NFL Draft, came into the league off one of the greatest seasons ever by a college running back. He immediately became the focal point of the Las Vegas offense as a rookie in 2025 but struggled because of a poor offensive line and clueless coordinator prior to the November firing of Chip Kelly. Jeanty is an ideal fit for the outside-zone run scheme expected to be implemented by new Raiders head coach Klint Kubiak, and the interior of the offensive line should be much better with the arrival of center Tyler Linderbaum, who was signed in March to a three-year, $81 million contract that included $60 million guaranteed and made him the highest-paid interior offensive lineman in NFL history. Las Vegas traded up to select Mike Washington in the fourth round of the 2025 NFL Draft. A speedster who posted a blazing 4.33-second time in the 40-yard dash, Washington is expected to begin the 2026 regular season as Jeanty's backup.

Through the Air

There's a chance that Fernando Mendoza, the 2026 NFL Draft's top overall pick, will begin the regular season backing up veteran Kirk Cousins. It won't be long until Mendoza takes over as the starter—once he does, he'll need time to adjust to the speed of the NFL. Tight end Brock Bowers has proven over his first two NFL seasons to be a YAC force who is also capable of creating separation on intermediate routes. He easily set the records for receptions and yards by a rookie tight end in 2024 while coming within six catches of matching Zach Ertz's NFL single-season record for receptions by a tight end.

On the Ground

The L.A. backfield entered last season with an entirely new look after the Chargers' signing of Najee Harris and selection of Omarion Hampton in the first round of the 2025 NFL Draft. Harris was limited by injuries to only 15 carries over three games and is no longer on the roster. Hampton is an old-school back with a straight-ahead running style—he fits what the Chargers want to do with a physical rushing attack that wears down opposing defenses. He'll be complemented in 2026 by Keaton Mitchell, an undersized lightning-bug back who showed promise at times over an injury-riddled three seasons in Baltimore. The No. 3 back will likely be Kimani Vidal, who showed signs of improvement last season after having struggled as a rookie in 2024.

Through the Air

Justin Herbert has the ability to carry out as expansive a passing scheme as an offensive coordinator can imagine; he provides plenty of solutions for the Chargers' offense, and that ability was on display early in his career with a collection of receivers that had recognizable names but were utterly plodding nonetheless. Ladd McConkey, a second-round pick in the 2024 NFL Draft, emerged as Herbert's favorite target during an impressive rookie season before his production dipped in 2025. Tre Harris, the 55th overall pick in 2025, has a chance to be eventually develop into a better professional receiver than collegiate one as he continues to learn the intricacies of the position—he might still be another year away from becoming a reliable contributor. Tight end Oronde Gadsden, a fifth-round pick in 2025, broke out over a four-game stretch starting in mid-October during which he caught 24 of 27 targets for 377 yards and a pair of scores.

On the Ground

Kyren Williams entered the NFL with a reputation as a great passing-down back with questionable early-down value. That assessment was, obviously, incorrect—Williams is an excellent pure runner. Operating heavily out of pistol looks, the 2023 and '24 Rams leaned on the run as heavily as they had since Matthew Stafford took over for Jared Goff as the team's quarterback before the 2025 team leaned more pass-heavy during Stafford's MVP season. Williams remains the backfield's unquestioned starter, though Blake Corum, a third-round pick in the 2024 NFL Draft who can play on all three downs, is expected to take on a bigger role than the one he held over his first two pro seasons.

Through the Air

After Stafford's arrival, the Rams started to move away from a reliance on play-action concepts to more of a classic spread-'em-and-shred-'em approach, albeit one with more modern pre-snap concepts like pistol formations and lots of motion. The result has been Stafford operating at an MVP level at times even before his career-best performance in 2025. When his supporting cast has been fully healthy, the Stafford-led Rams have arguably been the best offense in football the past three seasons. As a rookie in 2023, Puka Nacua stepped into the role of Cooper Kupp, who was working his way through early-season hamstring injuries, and Nacua's status at the top target in the Rams' passing game has remained unchanged. Nacua's toughness working between the numbers and YAC ability have resulted in him being an even bigger threat than Kupp ever was. Davante Adams stepped in immediately as an effective second option in his first season with the team in 2025. He was the NFL's premier red-zone threat while leading the NFL with 14 receiving touchdowns last season. Tight end Tyler Higbee is likely to continue to lose playing time to both Colby Parkinson and Terrance Ferguson, who was a second-round selection in the 2025 NFL Draft.

On the Ground

A third-round pick in the 2023 NFL Draft, De'Von Achane is arguably the fastest running back in football. Although there's no chance that he'll average 7.8 yards per carry like he did as a rookie in 2023, he should end up with a double-digit touchdown total for a fourth straight season. Ollie Gordon, a sixth-round pick in the 2025 NFL Draft, began his rookie season as Miami's No. 2 back before Jaylen Wright assumed that role soon after returning from a leg injury. Gordon and Wright are expected to spend this summer battling for the job as the backup to Achane.

Through the Air

Miami's receiving corps is riddled with so many question marks entering the 2026 regular season that a strong case could be made for Achane being the top target for new quarterback Malik Willis. On a team that as recently as last season had Tyreek Hill and Jaylen Waddle combine to form the one of the fastest receiving tandems in NFL history, the top veteran receivers are Malik Washington, Jalen Tolbert and Tutu Atwell. That makes it hard to envision the Dolphins having success through the air unless they receive significant contributions from at least one of the three wideouts the team selected among its 13 picks in April's draft. There's a chance that Caleb Douglas and Chris Bell, both of whom were drafted in the third round, play major roles as rookies in 2026.

On the Ground

Aaron Jones stepped in two seasons ago as the new lead back for the Vikings. It was a similar scheme to the one he was a part of in Green Bay, heavy on mid- and outside-zone runs. Although Jones enters the 2026 season as Minnesota's lead back, expect Jordan Mason, who was acquired from San Francisco prior to last season, to continue to have a significant role, particularly in short-yardage situations. There's a chance that sixth-round rookie Demond Claiborne will surpass Zavier Scott for the No. 3 spot on the Vikings' depth chart prior to the start of the 2026 regular season.

Through the Air

Vikings head coach Kevin O'Connell's superpower is his play design and play-calling when he has a Plan A quarterback under center. That was Kirk Cousins for every one of O'Connell's seasons in Minnesota prior to 2024, which is when Sam Darnold then thrived in his lone season as a Viking. The success of Minnesota's passing game was supposed to continue in 2025 with J.J. McCarthy, the 10th overall pick of the 2024 NFL Draft who had missed all of his rookie season with a knee injury. McCarthy was abysmal, however, which is what prompted the Vikings to sign Kyler Murray to a one-year contract after he was released by the Cardinals in March. The biggest beneficiary of the upgrade will be superstar wideout Justin Jefferson, who has the ability to separate with ease. Jordan Addison emerged as the No. 2 wideout during a solid rookie season in 2023, and he followed it up with an even better 2024 before struggling along with the rest of Minnesota's passing game in '25. Jauan Jennings will be the No. 3 receiver.

On the Ground

Rhamondre Stevenson remains the lead back in New England and is capable of providing efficient running with a heavy workload. Despite his size, Stevenson has never been an effective short-yardage rusher. TreVeyon Henderson, a second-round selection in the 2025 NFL Draft, is expected to get a bigger share of the workload than he had during an up-and-down rookie season in which he was inconsistent while at times exhibiting game-breaking ability. The running ability of quarterback Drake Maye will also continue to be an important element in the Patriots' ground attack.

Through the Air

Josh McDaniels returned prior to last season after having served as New England's offensive coordinator from 2006 through 2008 and then again from 2012 through 2021. His offense is heavy on play-action concepts and moving pockets—Maye is basically Justin Herbert physically, just with more of a gunslinger approach. It wasn't a shock when tight end Hunter Henry ended up as the Patriots' leader in targets and receiving yards while tying DeMario Douglas for the team lead in receptions in 2024. He's a big target in the short and intermediate areas over the middle. New England signed Stefon Diggs prior to last season, and it was Diggs who led the team in receiving in 2025. Romeo Doubs, who was signed in March to a four-year, $80 million contract, could end up replacing the production New England received from Diggs. Doubs is a versatile receiver with the potential to help the Patriots improve their efficiency inside the 20-yard line—20 of his 23 career scores (including playoffs) have come in the red zone.

On the Ground

Alvin Kamara isn't the back he used to be, and it's safe to assume that the Saints no longer wanted their offense to be flipping Kamara the ball behind the line of scrimmage seven times every week. That's likely part of what prompted the team to sign Travis Etienne in March to four-year deal worth somewhere between $48 million and $52 million, depending on whose reporting you choose to believe. Kamara's 2026 role is expected to be as a change-of-pace back with Etienne getting the overwhelming majority of the early-down workload. The No. 3 back is expected to be Kendre Miller, a 2023 third-round pick who has been limited by injuries to only 21 of a possible 51 games in his pro career.

Through the Air

Derek Carr's retirement in May 2025 paved the way for Tyler Shough, the 40th overall pick of the 2025 draft, to take over as the quarterback in New Orleans—though it took until early November for Shough to get his first NFL start in place of Spencer Rattler. Chris Olave will once again be the Saints' most-targeted receiver, and second-year head coach Kellen Moore will continue to prioritize getting the ball into Olave's hands. The team's second-best receiver heading into last season was Rashid Shaheed, who was dealt to Seattle last November. The starter opposite Olave in 2026 is expected to be Jordyn Tyson. The eighth overall pick in the 2026 NFL Draft, Tyson enters the league with considerable upside. Even at 6-foot-2 and more than 200 pounds, he tends to play bigger than his size. Tyson did, however, deal with hamstring injuries in 2025 and was sidelined for most of the pre-draft process because of hamstring issues. Juwan Johnson is a supersized wide receiver who has grown into the starting tight end role.

On the Ground

Although the three-year, $16.5 million contract Devin Singletary signed prior to the 2024 season suggested that the Giants viewed him as their lead back for 2024, Tyrone Tracy was a fifth-round draft pick who ended up being the best fantasy option in New York's backfield as a rookie that season. It was Tracy who then began the 2025 regular season as the team's starter, only to be surpassed on the depth chart by Cam Skattebo, a fourth-round pick in the 2025 NFL Draft who had spent his first three college seasons at Sacramento State before transferring to Arizona State, where he became highly productive. The expectation is that Skattebo will be back in the top spot on the Giants' depth chart after suffering season-ending ankle injury last October. Tracy will likely be the backup with Singletary in the No. 3 role.

Through the Air

The Giants traded up into the first round to select quarterback Jaxson Dart with the 25th overall pick of the 2025 NFL Draft, and he showed signs as a rookie that he can develop into one of the NFL's better quarterbacks. The selection of Dart came one year after New York landed a true No. 1 receiver for the first time since Odell Beckham Jr. in Malik Nabers. The sixth overall selection of the 2024 NFL Draft is an absolutely electric playmaker with a blend of YAC ability and deep speed—he just needs a little more polish as a route runner and at the catch point after playing only four games last season before suffering a torn ACL during the Giants' win over Chargers. With Wan'Dale Robinson having departed for Tennessee, the expectation is that Darnell Mooney will be the team's No. 2 wideout. One of new head coach John Harbaugh's first moves after arriving in New York was to sign tight end Isaiah Likely, who figures to play a prominent role in the 2026 passing game.

On the Ground

Breece Hall has a blend of size and twitch that has translated well to the pro level when he's been healthy enough to stay on the field over his first three NFL seasons. What separates him from other backs with similar traits are his instincts and feel as a runner, especially in tight spaces between the tackles. He's a loose, fluid athlete for his size, and he has the quickness to create in those tight spaces. Hall's long speed, however, falls more in the good-not-great category, and he rarely runs away from defenders at the third level. Third-year backs Braelon Allen and Isaiah Davis, selected in the 2024 NFL Draft's fourth and fifth rounds, respectively, fill out New York's depth chart.

Through the Air

Geno Smith's ability to extend plays when appropriate helped him finish fourth among NFL quarterbacks in passing yards in 2024. Although his performance in 2025 was downright abysmal, Smith at least has a chance for a bounceback season if the Jets' young receivers develop quickly. While wideout Garrett Wilson isn't big, he's competitive at the catch point and flashes remarkable body control, often contorting his body to make plays along the sideline. Omar Cooper, the 30th overall pick of the 2026 NFL Draft , is expected to operate as the Jets' No. 2 wideout. The No. 2 target in the Jets' passing game, however, could end up being Kenyon Sadiq, the 16th overall pick in April's draft and the only tight end selected in the first round. Sadiq is a big-play threat whose 13 gains of 20 or more yards for Oregon last season ranked second among college tight ends. He then became the first tight end ever to run the 40-yard dash in less than 4.4 seconds at the NFL Combine.

On the Ground

Philadelphia's offense boasts the NFL's most expansive and diverse rushing attack, which is due in large part to quarterback Jalen Hurts' contributions. The Eagles, however, would not have gone and signed running back Saquon Barkley prior to the 2024 season if they didn't intend to use him extensively, and Barkley ended up becoming just the ninth player in NFL history to eclipse 2,000 rushing yards in a single season. While Hurts' presence will keep opponents honest when it comes to read-option looks and backside pursuit, Barkley is going to continue to be a workhorse on the ground. There's reason to believe that the heavy workload he carried in his first season in Philadelphia contributed to the decline in his 2025 production and that he'll bounce back with a much stronger 2026.

RB SAQUON BARKLEY

Through the Air

With Kellen Moore having departed to become the Saints' head coach after his lone season as Philadelphia's offensive coordinator, it was up to new coordinator Kevin Patullo to figure out how to get Hurts to continue playing at a high level in 2025 while also getting him to continue to grow as a passer. Patullo, the Eagles' passing game coordinator since 2021, was removed from the role after Philadelphia's passing game failed to live up to expectations last season. With A.J. Brown having worn out his welcome, DeVonta Smith is expected to run a more diverse route tree in 2026. A smooth and fluid athlete who gets in and out of breaks without gearing down, Smith has exceptional ball-tracking skills. While tight end Dallas Goedert has long been Hurts' favorite underneath option, it will likely be Makai Lemon, the 20th overall pick in April's draft, who will emerge as the No. 2 target in 2026.

On the Ground

With Najee Harris having left Pittsburgh prior to last season, the belief was that third-round rookie Kaleb Johnson would end up getting the bulk of the early-down work in the Steelers' 2025 backfield. Johnson, however, failed to pick up where he left off after a very productive 2024 in his final collegiate season at Iowa, ending his first pro season with just 69 yards on 28 carries over 10 games. Although Johnson gets a fresh start under new head coach Mike McCarthy, the expectation is that he will begin the 2026 season behind both Jaylen Warren and Rico Dowdle. Warren has proven to be too dynamic to keep off the field, and he established himself last season as more than just a third-down and two-minute back. Dowdle showed last season in Carolina that he's a capable runner who has the ability to contribute on all three downs.

Through the Air

The decision to trade George Pickens to Dallas prior to last season left DK Metcalf as the No. 1 receiver in Pittsburgh. Metcalf tends to be at his best on in-breaking routes at the intermediate level, which is a staple in McCarthy's offense. That's because McCarthy intends to utilize play-action concepts far more frequently than the Steelers have in recent seasons. Michael Pittman was acquired from the Colts in early March and will likely serve as an underneath target to complement Metcalf. Tight end Pat Freiermuth had a significant pass-catching role in Pittsburgh's offense last season, and his role will likely be more significant in 2026 now that Jonnu Smith is no longer on the roster.

On the Ground

While Kyle Shanahan's offense is fairly derivative of the one his father Mike ran for many years, his small tweaks and sharp play-calling ability have taken it to another level, especially when it comes to the run game. When he's healthy, Christian McCaffrey piles up numbers in Shanahan's system; the frequency with which the running back works in wide-open spaces is a testament to coach and player. Kaelon Black, a third-round selection in the 2026 NFL Draft, is expected to enter the 2026 regular season as the team's No. 2 running back ahead of Jordan James and Isaac Guerendo.

Through the Air

Quarterback Brock Purdy's ability to anticipate is a bit overstated—San Francisco's play designs and play-calling are so good, and the team's skill-position players are so much better than most of the opponents trying to defend them, that it often appears as if Purdy is operating a step ahead of the defense. The reason Purdy works in Shanahan's system whereas Trey Lance did not is that Purdy is a decisive quarterback and quick processor. The hope is that wideout Ricky Pearsall can develop into a true three-level threat, and that he's not only capable in catch-and-run situations but is able to also separate at the intermediate level. That would allow Pearsall to take advantage of the attention opposing defenses will likely be paying to Mike Evans, who arrives from Tampa Bay as one of the game's most productive boundary receivers. Once tight end George Kittle returns after having suffered a torn Achilles in January, he will have games where the statistical production just isn't there, especially with McCaffrey taking many of those underneath catch-and-run opportunities in San Francisco's passing game.

It was speculated in last year's edition of this publication that Kenneth Walker would benefit not only from new offensive coordinator Klint Kubiak wanting to lean more on the run game than his fired predecessor Ryan Grubb did the prior season, but also from Kubiak wanting to do so with multiple zone concepts. That turned out to be the case, and with Walker having departed for Kansas City, it will be rookie Jadarian Price, the final pick of the 2026 NFL Draft's first round, who should benefit this season. Although Kubiak departed to become the head coach in Las Vegas, new Seahawks coordinator Brian Fleury told reporters in February that his goal is "to maintain" Kubiak's offense. Zach Charbonnet is a big back with some little-man skills, a zone runner who can make plays in space. He is expected to miss the first several weeks of the 2026 season while recovering from a torn ACL he suffered this past January.

Through the Air

The three-year, $100.5 million deal Sam Darnold signed last year included a $15 million roster bonus he received this past March. With both DK Metcalf and Tyler Lockett having departed prior to last season, Jaxon Smith-Njigba emerged as the top target in Seattle's passing game. He is a surgeon as a route-runner thanks to a combination of quick feet, exceptional body control and fluid athleticism. Smith-Njigba created separation with ease and transitioned seamlessly to a runner after the catch throughout a 2025 season in which he won NFL Offensive Player of the Year honors. He'll be complemented by Rashid Shaheed, who was acquired from the Saints last November and signed a three-year, $51 million contract in March that includes $34.7 million guaranteed.

After surpassing 10 carries in only one of his first nine games as a rookie in 2024, Bucky Irving saw his role grow over the second half of that regular season. He carried the ball 12 or more times in all but one of Tampa Bay's final eight games and then entered 2025 as the lead back. A combination of injuries and ineffectiveness, however, resulted in a disappointing performance that saw Irving's yards-per-carry average plummet from 5.4 to 3.4. With Rachaad White having departed for Washington, Kenneth Gainwell is expected to be the Buccaneers' No. 2 running back after signing a two-year, $14 million contract in March. Sean Tucker is set to begin the 2026 regular season as the No. 3 back and will likely continue to handle short-yardage duties.

Through the Air

The biggest challenge for new offensive coordinator Zac Robinson, who held the same position in Atlanta the past two seasons, will be to keep quarterback Baker Mayfield playing within his limits. The Buccaneers' best offensive players are the team's top two receivers: 30-year-old Chris Godwin and 23-year-old Emeka Egbuka. While Egbuka is expected to spend most of his time in 2026 lined up on the outside, Godwin will continue to be more of a possession receiver who could end up leading Tampa Bay in targets out of the slot. After running 75 percent of his Ohio State routes from the slot, Egbuka lined up all over the formation, partly out of necessity after injuries ravaged the Buccaneers' receiving corps and partly because he has the ability and versatility to do so. Gainwell caught 73 passes in his lone season in Pittsburgh and will play a significant role in Tampa Bay's passing game in 2026. Jalen McMillan, a third-round selection in the 2024 NFL Draft with a solid size/speed combination, will be the No. 3 receiver.

Tony Pollard's increased workload with Dallas in 2023 resulted in the least efficient season of his NFL career. He has been only marginally better the past two seasons after having signed a three-year, $24 million contract with Tennessee in March 2024. Tyjae Spears finished 2024 by scoring four times while averaging 87 scrimmage yards over his final three appearances of the season. He was unable to carry that momentum into 2025, however, and will spend this summer battling rookie Nicolas Singleton a role behind Pollard. A foot injury Singleton suffered at the Senior Bowl in late January required surgery, prevented him from participating in pre-draft workouts and likely played a role in him falling to the fifth round of April's draft.

Through the Air

Will Levis played so recklessly in 2023 and '24 that the Titans had no choice but to use the top overall pick of the 2025 NFL Draft on Cam Ward, whose strong 2024 season as a senior in college at Miami elevated his draft stock. He checks off a lot of the boxes, including some important ones such as accuracy, football IQ, mobility and a strong arm. Ward struggled in 2025 but improved as his rookie season progressed. The Titans have a lot of new faces among their receiving corps, starting with Carnell Tate, the fourth overall pick in this past April's draft. Expect him to immediately become the top target for Ward and new offensive coordinator Brian Daboll. Reuniting with Daboll after their time together with the Giants is Wan'Dale Robinson, who was signed in March to a four-year deal worth $78 million with $38 million guaranteed. Veteran Calvin Ridley, a better downfield threat than either of Tate or Robinson, is expected to be the No. 3 receiver in 2026.

On the Ground

Washington's offense was much more ground-based in 2024 than many expected, as there was little reason for the Commanders to use the second overall pick of the 2024 NFL Draft on quarterback Jayden Daniels unless they were going to utilize his rushing ability. Sure enough, offensive coordinator Kliff Kingsbury's spread approach organically created some space for Daniels as a runner. It all fell apart last season, however, with a variety of injuries—a knee sprain, hamstring strain and elbow dislocation—limiting Daniels to seven games and resulting in the Commanders and Kingsbury "mutually agreeing to go their separate ways." David Blough was promoted to coordinator after two years as Washington's assistant quarterbacks coach and will oversee a backfield that includes Jacory Croskey-Merritt, Rachaad White and Jerome Ford along with sixth-round rookie Kaytron Allen.

Through the Air

When he entered the league, Daniels proved to be much further along as a passer than he received credit for. One of Blough's biggest challenges will be to dictate mismatches with pre-snap movement as effectively as Kingsbury was able to in 2024. Terry McLaurin is likely to lead Washington in target share despite the fact that he works farther downfield as an X-receiver. It would not be a total shock to see tight end Chig Okonkwo emerge as the No. 2 option in the Commanders' passing game. A catch-and-run weapon who also has enough speed to sneak up the seam, Okonkwo played fewer than 400 snaps as a rookie before ending the 2023 season on a high note with 27 receptions for 322 yards over his final seven games. He then regressed a bit in 2024 and struggled along with the rest of Tennessee's passing game in 2025. He now gets a fresh start in Washington. Antonio Williams, the 71st overall pick in April's draft, has a chance to begin the 2026 regular season as the No. 2 wideout.
